

Organisms are grouped by their shared derived characteristics. Derived characteristics evolved in an ancestor of one group but not another. When animals share these characteristics they must be more closely related than animals that do not.

Branching Diagrams show relationship of organisms with derived characteristics.